City staff will look at the city's "carbon footprint" before council considers trying to erase it. Coun. Pam Wolf wants the city to do things such as plant trees to offset the pollution its activities release into the atmosphere. She said Cambridge MP Gary Goodyear plants trees so his local office can say it's "carbon neutral" and doesn't contribute to climate change. Sustainable Waterloo was also at city council last week, asking the city to join in its Regional Carbon Initiative. That gives companies the opportunity to offset their pollution in a structured way. Council told staff to look at the best approach before endorsing anything.
