Communities across the province are competing to have the most citizens per capita registered for the Count Me In energy conservation challenge. City of Cambridge and Cambridge and North Dumfries Hydro are partnering to get the word out and invite citizens and business leaders to participate in the competition that winds up on Aug. 14.

"The city's philosophy is all about environmental consciousness and energy conservation," said Mayor Doug Craig in a statement. "Sign up online to take the pledge to begin using energy conserving practices at home, school or work."

The challenge also provides easily applicable solutions that citizens can implement into their daily routines. Count Me In offers 100 ideas for energy conservation that are ecologically and economically friendly.

There are events around the province planned to generate ideas towards energy conservation.

For Cambridge, there's a special movie night slated for Aug. 14 that not only includes image projection with Historic City Hall as a backdrop, but also offers a series of local prizes and information displays. The conservation-inspired event begins at dusk, featuring the movie Ferris Bueller's Day Off (PG-13). The event is free and be sure to bring your lawn chair.
