In 2005, the Province of Ontario passed a new law called the Accessibility for Ontarians with Disabilities ACT (AODA). The AODA provides for the development and enforcement of accessibility standards that address aspects of daily life in Ontario. The Accessibility Standards for Customer Service became law in 2008 and are now in force for all public, private and non-profit organizations. The Information and Communication Standard, the Employment Standard and the Transportation Standard all became law in July 2011 under the Integrated Accessibility Standard (IAR). Compliance deadlines under the IAR will be phased in over the next 5 – 10 years. All organizations should be working towards compliance with the AODA. (For more information visit the Ministry of Community and Social Services website at www.mcscs.gov.on.ca
